

Corncrakes

Not one among the rushes None in the meadows
None where the farmer dropped to his knees Lamenting the crumpled nest its requiem wringing his hands
 like a chaplain
 bringing bad news
 to the door
in the night time Them's rare wee things – them's rare!
 ... and rarer still the small clutch
 a universe among the rushes Small planets grounded in troubled heavens.
These scaplings scurry in frantic sorties To grub in the undergrowth amongst the brackens.
It is the night, it is the stars impress Africa, Africa, Africa
Opening the night
 terra incognita –
There is no way
 only opening the night

Listen, first intently;
 closely – no further than at arms length and then, when everything is detailed, clocked & inventoried & only then,
 double the circle Listen, double the circle, Listen sense unreachable places, calm places at the eye of hurricanes.
Flee your fever
 and with unholy impetus hurl
Into the nomadic sky,
 into severe places
 into unspeakable theatres of ablation, Into mystery, uncertainty, doubt, and tell everything

when you
return.

Maria McManus