

Danger Money

For the first time in years, Enniskillen Drama Festival's diverse programme has included a production by a Fermanagh-based theatre company. The Knocks Drama Group's first year competing on the festival circuit was incredibly promising, bringing John McManus' acclaimed play Danger Money to the Ardhowen stage.

The narrative is led by the play's sole character, Teddy The Mucker Tucker as he spends an afternoon recounting his life whilst packing turf for his landlord in a bog in County Leitrim. Tucker's traditional storytelling takes the audience on an imaginative journey through the highs and lows of his past experiences. At one point we are accompanying Tucker to London, a promising move at first, which was soon overshadowed by the dark turn of fate that ultimately had him return to his forsaken Irish homeland.

A rollercoaster of emotions from the offset, the audience felt it all. Hearty choruses of laughter were cut-off mid-chuckle by sudden gasps of shock as Tucker's humorous anecdotes unexpectedly took harrowing twists, his pace never losing momentum, emphasising the horror with its abruptness.

Damien McGirr's command of his role as Tucker was confident and charming as he naturally channelled his many facets, using comedic slurs and expression to front the character's extreme bitterness and pain. The play's director, Marty McManus, allowed McGirr to take complete control of his character, thus giving him dimension. He effortlessly carried the story with a monologue that was more akin to a one-sided conversation between the character and the audience thanks to the engaging quality and dialect of the speech. McGirr was unfazed by the added pressure of the playwright John McManus sitting in the audience, completely owning the character of Tucker. The audience left with the feeling that they'd just spent the last couple of hours sitting on a stump in the bog listening to an old friend share his tales.

A running theme of Danger Money was Tucker's freedom and his need to abscond, whether it be physically, by moving his life from place to place or psychologically, confessing how he often turned to alcohol as a temporary escape. These conflicting choices drive the narrative, subtly emphasised by the recurring theme of birds as a representation of the freedom and inner peace that Tucker seeks. When Tucker's stories were taking a lighter note, the soft singing of birds could be heard in the distance but contrastingly, a haunting silence filled the theatre when sadness and disillusionment struck.

The staging was simple yet considered, with minimal props such as the turf bags that Tucker filled occasionally as he spoke, providing subtle action to a play that was mainly vocalised storytelling. The uneven bog-land provided levels, a nod to the high and low points of Tucker's life as he shifted from standing tall on the bank in success to crouching low in dismay. The use of trees in the background added depth, hinting at the world beyond the bog in which Tucker was briefly absent from whilst undertaking his monotonous yet unexpectedly therapeutic task.

Even Tucker's clothing was highly considered. He wore a light coloured top and trousers that at the start of the play were already grubby, getting dirtier and dirtier as it progressed – a symbol of the downward spiral his life had taken. The mud is only temporary, like the smudges on Tucker's life. He has the opportunity to be washed clean and start afresh if he makes the right decisions.

The audience was hooked from the offset. By the end of the production, everyone was sitting at the edge of their seats, subconsciously leaning forward, wanting more. It was a testament to the ingenuity of the whole production team and the writing of McManus as the audience took to their feet to give a genuinely heartfelt standing ovation. Danger Money was awarded the Audience's Choice Award at the festival close. A stellar performance and a very impressive debut on the festival scene.

Jessica Campbell is a columnist for The Impartial Reporter and former contributing writer for The Skinny magazine. She enjoys writing poetry in her spare time

Fermanagh Film Club

In January 2018 Fermanagh Film Club celebrated its 10th anniversary with a programme of Fun, Film and Music in the Ardhoven Theatre, Enniskillen.

Short Films by Moving Image students from Erne Integrated, Enniskillen Royal Grammar and the South West College were screened in competition during the afternoon, followed by Irish Award Winning Shorts. The 'Big Film' was the Oscar-nominated The Florida Project which would go on to great acclaim. You saw it first in Fermanagh Film Club!

It was a long way from that first meeting in 2008. A small announcement in the local press invited anyone interested in forming a Film Club to a meeting in the Railway Hotel. Five people attended. Who could have imagined then the thriving club it would become?

The club is affiliated with Access Cinema and is supported by BFI, Film Hub NI and the Arts Council. The declared aim of Fermanagh Film Club is to bring a varied programme of art house films to as wide an audience as possible. With that in mind, this year's films included the Palestinian/Israeli film In Between, which looked at the challenges faced by young Arab-Israeli women living an independent life in Tel-Aviv who must negotiate being 'in between' cultures and traditions; and an Irish film The Drummer & the Keeper which explored the unlikely friendship between a chaotic young rock drummer and a young man with Asperger's Syndrome.

All films are shown in their original language with English subtitles. This year's languages included: Arabic, Danish, English, French, German, Hebrew, Hindi, Swedish and Russian. The Club has participated in the FLive festival and local community celebrations by showing films of special interest in addition to their seasonal programme. Vintage Hammer Horror films in the old Regal Cinema last Halloween, with the audience encouraged to come along in fancy dress, proved a big hit!

The club runs two seasons; from September to December and from January to April, with six films per season, but with funding from BFI on the theme of Diversity, we screened an additional film on Tuesday 10th April, the Oscar-nominated Call Me by My Name.

Fermanagh Film Club is open to everyone, and while new members are always welcome, you don't have to be a member to come to a film. You can buy a ticket at the door on the night.

Venue: Fermanagh House.

Time 8:00pm

Membership £24 (Student Membership £10).

Non-members £5 on the night. (Students £3 on the night).

The programme for 2018/19 will be on the website:

www.fermanaghfilmclub.com

Christina Campbell

Kindred Spirits

Drew University's fifth Transatlantic Connections Conference was held in Bundoran from January 10–13 to celebrate the many ties between the United States and Ireland. The cover image features the Choctaw Nation memorial that commemorates how they, though suffering greatly themselves following the Trail of Tears that drove them from their own land, sent money to buy food during the Great Famine.

In that same dark time, according to family tradition, Paula Meehan's family left Leitrim for Liverpool, only to remain stuck in the Monto district of Dublin for the next century. These are a few notes from her final keynote speech which was, she said; just an excuse for giving out poetry.

The speech was titled The Kindness of Strangers, and she began by saying how much she relied on that in her early wandering years.

The bad stuff you met, the negativity, the aggression – if you have a path as an artist, all that can be turned into power for the good... That's the only truth I know.

She dedicated the reading to Alicia Suskin Ostriker, who was also present.

*[Her book Stealing the Language] gave me a kind of an armour to survive the world that I was heading back to here in Ireland... I knew I would get the poems I needed here on this island, in my native city.*

While she had been away, heroin had hit the city. In her latest book, Geomantic, Paula took her inspiration from the commemorative quilts that communities made for their children lost through addiction. Especially hard hit was her own community:

the descendants of O'Casey's tenement dwellers ... they knew story and they knew song. They gave it with such generosity.

There are 81 short poems designed as patches, each with nine lines of nine syllables each.

The Promise

I won't do it. Not today. I won't do it anyway. Not today. No.
Not because I can't do it. I won't.
Fallow fields lie dreaming under snow.
They won't be ploughed; not this spring they won't.
On the fencepost, a grey hooded crow is part of some mystery I won't fathom now. Though I'm really quite low.
I won't do it. Not today. I won't.

It interests me that the imagery in material that's suitable for children is often ferocious and violent and terrifying... If we learn to feel fear in what should be a safe place, maybe then when we're in the 'real' world and encounter fear, our bodies won't close down in the face of it.

The Broken Bough

We held our breath when you were a boy,

Out on a limb of the old oak tree
Helpless below as you shimmied up
Into its shadowy canopy.
That day the bough broke and you hung there
Alone through the sudden thunderstorm
We came upon you after, unafraid though drenched to the bone. The pattern set;
all those times since, we wasted our breath.

The American poet Gwendoline Brooks was the first person of colour to receive the Pulitzer Prize for Literature. Her book A Street in Bronzeville gave Paula:

models and clues as to how I could write about my own community without patronising them, without making excuses, without 'on-behalf-ism' ... How do you negotiate your own demons and your own road with the responsibility of singing to and for your community? ...

This poem was inspired by a line of hers; the singers and workers that never handled the air.

The Ghost Song

From a dream of Summer, of absinthe
I woke to Winter. Carol singers decked the halls of some long-lost homeland.
Late-night shoppers and drowsy workers headed for the train. The night you died was two-faced. June light never far from mind though snow fell. I handled grief like molten sunshine; learned to breathe your high lithe, ghost song from thinnest air.

She was asked to write a suite of poems for the Museum of Tenement Life in Dublin.

I really do believe that Poetry is a sovereign state; it's not History, it's not Sociology, it's a state onto itself. Unless we take those freedoms ... we may be .. co-opted by various agendas and gangs... If poetry is to be always an exploration, so you don't even know your own agenda till you've written it, it can lead to some strange arguments... I think I alarmed them slightly when I presented the finished piece, which is called Museum.

She discovered that the word originally meant a place to put things that please the Muses, so she wrote a sonnet for each of the Nine Muses. The house that is the Tenement Museum was built for Lord and Lady Molesworth. It was one of the earliest and grandest Georgian houses on the North Side. It went from being a family mansion of the ruling class to being a family to a room. The classical Georgian iconography was still there, but its meaning didn't become apparent until she studied poetry.

In the tenement where she grew up the front door was always left open so homeless people could come in, to sleep under the stair or in any nook and cranny they could get into. There were ex-soldiers of the Great War, and the displaced women of Monto, the old red-light district. She remembers being sent out with a cup of tea for them in the morning.

To Polyhymnia, the Muse of Sacred Poetry

Our Lady of the Apocalypse

Our Lady of the Apocalypse, who never closed your heart to the dissolute; pray for us, who gave shelter in broken-down Georgian tenements
Who kept the doors open to the demented ones,
those who came in rags and miasmas of foul odour,
in delirium tremens, the worn-out old spunkers,
the displaced relics of Imperial trauma.
Oh, sweet daughters of Memory, veiled in Enigma,
who brought longed-for oblivion to the meths-drinkers,
the dipsos, the alcos, the put-down no-hopers,
those who came in from Chaos, from cold, from winds,
from rains, to sleep it all off in hallways and stairwells.
Who rent the long night with sobs, who cried out to you in the throes of their last agony.

Grant them eternal succour.

Jenny Brien

The Magic of Music

There are so many things in this world that divide us as human beings, that seem to create conflict and strife, but if there is one thing that can be pointed to, as bringing brings people together in a positive way, it is music.

More than any other art form, music has this great collectivising aspect. It can be enjoyed on your own, in the privacy of your home or through the plastic earpieces of your iPhone, but there is little doubt that the experience is enhanced by coming together and sharing it, either by participating or just communal listening.

Some anthropologists have speculated that early humans sang before a common language was developed. You don't always need to comprehend the precise meaning behind chants, chorals or songs, for them to touch the emotional centres of your cortex. From the ululations of the warriors of the Serengeti, to plainsong in Gregorian Chant, from the whirling Sufi dervishes to the polyphonic harmonies of traditional Georgian, the keening sorrows of Iberian Fado to contemporary Gangsta Rap – they all have the capacity to reach into our hearts and to transport us to other, more ethereal forms.

My Grandfather sang at weddings and funerals, – sadly, much more of the latter. He did it for a shilling, which paid for the following Saturday:, a ticket to the rugby or a theatre show, a few beers, a sneaky bet and fish & chips on the way home. He had a lovely lyric tenor voice, that to my biased ears, sounded like the great Enrico Caruso on the 78 that he used to played on a gramophone.

Music was always present in my home as I grew up. We had one of those old Radiograms and I used to play all my parents' records: Favourite Arias, Mario Lanza, Kathleen Ferrier, Frank Sinatra, Nina Simone – to The Dubliners. I would sit on the speaker part of it, turn the Bass wheel up to 10 on the dial (there was no 11!) and feel the deep, low vibrations through my backside.

To my parents' horror I moved on to heavy rock and metal of Led Zeppelin, Queen and Iron Maiden. That was simply beyond their comprehension at the time – though I later had my father watching VHS videos with the likes of Meat Loaf, Gary Moore, Heart, and Whitesnake and thoroughly enjoying them.

This was the thing; my parents taught me not to be too 'precious' in your music listening and to try different things, my tastes remains catholic and eclectic to this day.

Live music has led me to have many wonderful experiences and come together with a diverse range of people: a week in Bayreuth, enjoying The Ring Cycle by Wagner and the endless conversations in the hotel bar with fellow Wagner enthusiasts; seeing Madame Butterfly for the first time and having my heart broke sore by her death at the end. Then there was a Manowar concert in Birmingham. where Joey DeMaio played Sting of the Bumblebee (his take on the more well-known Flight) on a 12-string Rickenbacker Bass, and the even more impossibly flying digits of Scandinavian axeman Yngwie J. Malmsteen in Bristol.

There was that time in Edinburgh seeing Scotrock band Runrig, when the notes of Banks of Loch Lomond struck up and I was grabbed by a leery-eyed, bekilted native and told to 'Sing ye Sassenach gobshite ye' (I am Welsh but I did not argue the point). So we sang and pogoed until I needed a double hip replacement and – my blood roiling with Braveheart blue woad – I was rewarded with a whisky-sodden sloppy kiss on the lips. It was a little forward, but When in Rome... as they say.

Then in Dublin one steamy July evening, I went to see The Lone Bellow, a band who performed a range of self-penned Americana. At the end of the concert, they came down from the stage and in the middle of the crowd, sans electric amplification, performed Paul Simon's Slip Slidin' Away. Kanene Doheny's soulful vocals were met with a chorus of 200 drunken concert-goers.

Here's the thing, it was not roared out: instead there were perfect harmonies, totally unrehearsed; and we sang with restraint, gentleness and with perfect pitch. It was a spiritual experience and our cheeks were wet with tears; it was an unforgettable moment.

Music at its best is capable of these all things and many more besides. Music is magic and those of us blessed to be open to it, can have our lives transformed by it.

John Llewellyn James

ComicFest 2017

After last year's very successful launch the Enniskillen ComicFest returns on 5th and 6th May 2017, bigger and better, to celebrate all aspects of storytelling and sequential art. ComicFest 2016 proved that there was a great demand for an event of this type in the Enniskillen area.

Comics currently enjoy a very high profile with many titles regularly topping literary sales charts, and both television shows and films based on comics growing ever more successful. Related subjects like animation and computer games are booming industries.

Our schools programme last year was very popular as Moving Image and Creative Media attract more and more students who want to pursue a career in these industries and want first hand information in storyboarding, storytelling, digital art and character design. Primary schools and Enniskillen library also saw comics as a fun way of engaging children and encouraging them to read. The Library now has a special section for graphic novels and comic collections.

Over twenty Writers and Artists from across the UK and Ireland will be attending ComicFest 2017 and guests of honour include John Wagner and Carlos Ezquerra, the creators of Judge Dredd; Steve MacManus, legendary editor of 2000AD; and Marvel and DC artist Yanick Paquette. Also among the guests is Nigel Parkinson who draws Dennis The Menace and Minnie The Minx for the Beano.

The highly regarded British comic 2000AD is celebrating its 40th Anniversary this year. We are very proud to announce that the Enniskillen ComicFest has been awarded Official Status by 2000AD publishers Rebellion and the Fermanagh Film Club will be having a special screening of the acclaimed documentary Future Shock!: The Story Of 2000AD on Wednesday 3rd May in Fermanagh House. Tickets will be available on the door. Friday 5th May features our Schools Programme with the attending professionals presenting a range of talks and running workshops in Enniskillen Library. Then on Friday evening ComicFest is proud to present A Celebration of 40 Years Of 2000AD in the Ardhowen Theatre where all our guest creators will be interviewed and video material screened. The audience will also be able to put questions to our 2000AD Guests. Tickets cost £8 and are available from the Ardhowen.

Our main event is taking place on Saturday 6th May and this year our venue will be Enniskillen Castle. Yes, a Comic Convention in a Castle! The event will run from 10am until 6pm and no ticket is required. All our guests will be signing and sketching everything from Dennis The Menace to Batman throughout the day and there will be a programme of panel discussions and interviews. This is also Free Comic Book Day and free comics will be available, one per visitor. There will also be costumed characters in attendance for photo opportunities, as well as independent comic creators, exhibitors, merchandise and back issue dealers. As a special treat for our younger visitors we will periodically be running a Hero Academy and a Princess Academy, where any young apprentice hero or princess can receive training through fun activities and games.

ComicFest 2017 will conclude with a charity auction with all proceeds going to the Horizon West Children's Hospice. Last year we raised £2100 for this very important charity and we hope to increase on that this year.

Enniskillen ComicFest thanks the Arts Council For Northern Ireland, Fermanagh and Omagh District Council, Fermanagh Lakelands Tourism, Enniskillen Castle and Enniskillen Library for their support.

The Enniskillen ComicFest Team:

Chairman: Paul Trimble

Secretary: Aaron McVitty

Treasurer: Matthew Gault

Logistics: Chris Fawcett

Social Media Co-Ordinator: Stephen Trimble

Media Production: James Eames

Women Aloud Fermanagh

For the second year in a row, the female members of Fermanagh Writers joined other women writers in Northern Ireland on 8th March to celebrate International Women's Day.

Throughout the Province 150 women writers, organised by Women Aloud NI, hosted a series of literary public events, including readings, bookshop appearances and library events to inspire women everywhere to write, read, and champion the literary work of local women.

Fermanagh Writers hosted Women Aloud Fermanagh, an evening of stories and poems in our usual meeting place at Blakes of the Hollow, Enniskillen. The event brought together women writers from Fermanagh Writers and Omagh Robins, as well as other writers living in the border counties. The evening provided an opportunity for writers in the region to meet each other, chat, and share ideas and our writing. Our members have enjoyed our participation in the International Women's Day celebrations these past two years. Although it's only the women on stage, some of our male members help behind the scenes, operating the sound system and collecting admission fee. We try to include everyone in this fun and rewarding event.

The evening was a great success as a social and performance event. The small but enthusiastic audience enjoyed the writers' heartfelt performances and the writers had a chance to experience an audience's response to their work as well as to meet with other writers who understand and share their passion.

The atmosphere was relaxed yet professional. The MC Kate O'Shea left the call for performers open until everyone had arrived, so that those who might have been hesitant to get up in front of an audience had time to gather their courage and decide to brave it. But the relaxed atmosphere belied the organisation and polish behind the programme and none of the writers gave anything less than her best on stage. Each writer who stepped up to the microphone gave a poised, confident reading. The stories and poems ranged from a rant by Queen Maeve to a poignant story of childhood superstition and fear to a condemnation of female genital mutilation and much more. The readings were funny, sad, poignant, inspiring and stirring.

Most of the events Women Aloud NI organise to celebrate International Women's Day are free so that they are accessible to as many people as possible, but before our first Women Aloud evening last year, we decided to charge a small admission fee to raise money for the work of Fermanagh Women's Aid. This year the admission fee also covered the cost of supplying a complimentary copy of our publication Tavern Told Tales to each audience member. As a result of this year's event, Fermanagh Writers will donate £100 to Fermanagh Women's Aid. It's great to be part of something bigger than our own group and satisfying to share our writing with others. So we are looking forward to continued links with Women Aloud NI and to celebrating with writers throughout the province again next year.

Dianne Ascroft

A Colourful Debut

2016 may have been a tough year for music, but that certainly wasn't the case for emerging Fermanagh band Anto & the Echoes. After only a few short months of forming and honing their sound, they took on their debut gig in July. Punters were turned away from Charlie's bar as the crowd reached maximum capacity early in the night. A series of well-received gigs around Northern Ireland followed, and the band returned to Charlie's to close the year with another sell-out show.

This year has built further on their success, after spending some time in the studio, they have returned with a short Irish tour to promote a new three-track EP titled Youth. February saw the Echoes playing Dublin, Omagh, Portrush and The Empire Bar Belfast, finishing their tour with the release of an accompanying music video for their track Severed Ear.

The EP is a collection of three songs, with a vivid and engaging stadium rock sound. The first track, Pick Me Up, is a chaotic upbeat number, with punk & surf-rock guitar sound juxtaposed with flamboyant saloon piano reminiscent of Mungo Jerry's Summertime, overladen with rich harmonies and a vocal line with hints of Queen and Kate Bush.

The second track, Echoes, is a sentimental and nostalgic party anthem, falling in line with a more familiar stadium rock sound akin to The Killers and U2, with powerful crescendos and rich layered vocals carrying a strong sense of emotion.

Severed Ear is a love song through the eyes of a tortured painter, with a huge dynamic guitar sound played over a host of colourful lyrical metaphors. The accompanying music video perfectly captures the colourful essence of the song, with the location and cast used as a literal blank canvas for a rainbow of expression.

Frontman and songwriter Anthony Breen has worked in the film industry on Game Of Thrones, Line Of Duty and various feature films, and used his experience to envision the video and bring it to life with great help from his cinematographer Declan O'Granah.

Caiman O'Shea is a poet and singer-songwriter, and the driving force behind The Thing Itself.

Room, Room, Room for Mummers' Rhymes

The start button on the vintage cassette player makes a loud clunk. The tape hisses and crackles, then my father's voice fills the room with with a tumbling run of words:

*Room, Room, my gallant room, give me room to rhyme
I'll show you some activity about this Christmastime
The active youth, the active age
Our act was never acted on the stage...*

In 1977 I had recorded my father as he pulled out rhymes from his time as a mummer in Mulleek in the 1930s and 40s. As a child I had heard fragments of them from him in place of nursery rhymes.

Now, 19 years after his death, his voice brings back to life the crunch of heavy boots on rough lanes in the full December darkness of the Fermanagh countryside. He is one of a troupe of high-spirited young men roaming the back roads to bring an ancient drama into the kitchen of every house. Only his feet are cold; He is in a "lather of sweat" inside his heavy straw costume and he is glad to be able to take off his plaited straw headpiece between houses. Only some of his fellow mummies wear straw costumes, others wear long tunics and an "assortment of every rag they could get their hands on." Disguise was essential.

They approach a house. The Captain raps sharply three times on the door. This signifies something out of the ordinary in a place where neighbours announce their arrival with the noise of the latch lifting.

The door opens, the light from candles or oil lamps spills out into the darkness.

"Any admittance in his house for the Captain and his mummies?" is the formal request.

Then, with permission given, the camouflaged men burst in, ducking under the low door of the thatched cottage. They form a semi-circle at one end of the kitchen, from which each in turn steps forward to deliver their rhymes. There is Room, The Captain, Jack Straw, Beelzebub, Wee Divil Doubt, The Wran, Turkish Champion and Prince George. A fight breaks out between Turkish Champion and Prince George. There is a fierce clashing of wooden swords and Prince George falls down dead. The Captain shouts for the Doctor. The Doctor has medicine!

*The rue, the sue, the knuckles of a bumblebee,
The heart's blood of a smoothing iron,
All boiled up together.
And mixed in a jenny wran's bladder.*

The Doctor brings Prince George back to life with this concoction. A melodeon is played. A mummer called Miss Funny, complete with handbag and dress, dances with the Captain. There is more music and 'sport', and money is collected for the mummies' ball. Then, with a chorus of 'the best of luck to yis all', the fantastical troupe disappear again into the darkness.

On the tape when my father says the rhymes, his words run together as fast as his tongue can move. He stumbles over some of the rhymes, and he wonders aloud if there is "any man alive in Ireland today who knows all of the rhymes." Back then in 1977, he saw mumming as something dead, something belonging to the past.

So did the American anthropologist Henry Glassie, who had recorded mummers' rhymes in Ballymenone in south Fermanagh in 1972. In his scholarly, yet affectionate book, All Silver no Brass, written in 1975, he sees no place for Mummers in the modern Ireland where there is heat and light at the flick of a switch and nearly everyone has a car.

Of course at that time the Troubles had suspended mumming. When men of death prowled the roads it was no longer safe to invite masked men into your home in mid winter. Henry Glassie recognised the conflict between mumming and the troubles. He had seen beyond the mumming tradition as a response to the ancient concerns about the ebb and flow of light. He saw the play as demonstrating a community's genuine potential for violence, then containing it, subduing it, and resolving its tensions in music and dance. The Troubles perverted this vision. Vincent Woods demonstrates this perversion in his heartbreaking play At the Black Pig's Dyke. In it, sectarian assassins disguised as mummers go about their awful task of killing.

In spite of the Troubles and the trappings of modernity, the mumming tradition has proved resilient. In 1979, my father's fellow Mulleek man, the renowned traditional singer Paddy Tunney, devoted a chapter in his book The Stone Fiddle to the mummers' rhymes. My father's fear that no-one remembered them all was unfounded. In the same year, the Creevy mummers from outside Ballyshannon were revived. They brought the ancient drama, not just to homes in the locality and to pubs and hotels over a wide area, but also to Irish Americans in New York and Boston. My father's rhymes echoed all around me as I found myself in turn gathering an 'assortment of rags' to make a costume for my husband who had joined the Creevy mumming troupe.

If you are lucky enough to see the mummers, you will be linked back to a tradition which was first recorded in Ireland in the 17th century. It was in turn brought here from England, where it can be traced back to the 12th century, but its origins are still further back in the misty, pre-Christian era of sun worship.

While the rhymes and characters have changed over the centuries depending on time and place, the theme of death and rebirth has been constant. The mumming tradition itself has, like the play, experienced the ebb and flow of death and rebirth. The Creevy mummers ebbed in the 1980s, but between 1980 and 1995 a troupe of mummers became an annual school tradition in Ballyshannon Vocational school.

We may see ourselves as a modern, sophisticated people, but when we see the mummers, we connect again with life's unchanging central mystery of death and new life. The stop button on the cassette player makes a loud clunk but my Father's voice can still warm the room.

Room, Room, my gallant room, give me room to rhyme!

Olive Travers

The image I chose (origin unknown), came from a book published in the early 1970's. I do not know if either it or the caption is earlier. Jenny Brien

The Band of Blind and Buggered

Huw

First in line, as I have some vision
...slightly blurred.

I am well used to the dark as a miner.
(Must find a way to live like this.)
At least I can still sing.

Oh God. What a needless war.

*

Prentiss

I joined up to get away...

Goodbye to the windy island
Isolated, with bloody sheep.

Got to London – what a revelation!
Warmth and cultured people.
I was eating a meal
When all hell broke loose.

All is now darkness – not going back to Orkney.
London's out too.
Go South to find something to do.
(But who wants a blind shepherd?)

Oh God. What a mindless war.

*

Séamas

Must not stumble for the men behind
...and those in front.

Just a flash – then black darkness.

Won't be able to gather flax
Though I could learn to weave.
Will my girlfriend be waiting for me?

God what a sodding war.

*

Chaplain

I asked to go to the Somme
To bring comfort and succour to our troops
Two days in and shrapnel hit my face
Left me scarred and blinded

Now I cannot read God's Holy Word
Or serve the Eucharist.
(Though I may take Confession.)

Oh God. What an unholy war.

*

Lance

I enlisted as my family expected
For centuries we have served our country.

Blinded now and incapable of walking upright.
(Will I be able to ride a horse?)
No more hunting, though fishing is possible.

My brother will take over our Estate.

God. What a wasteful war.

Anna James

Frank's Letter

(with interjections by Cathy Donnell as Resa and John Monaghan as Frank)

My dear Cousin Resa

Frank: What side of the bush did yon rose spring from?

Just a p.c. to acknowledge your welcome letter received some weeks ago.

Resa: Feels like a lifetime.

I would have written a few lines before this if I had not been expecting to go on leave any time

Resa: Heaven forfend

but it seems now that leave has been put back for a few weeks, on account of things being a bit unsettled.

Frank: Bloody Fritz and this bloody war!

I am having a tip-top time

Frank: as Colonel 'Stupid' Platt says out here

Resa: Wherever 'here' is at present & am not too keen about getting leave. This is a home away from home.

Resa: What's wrong? Is James..?

Frank: Lying to her is getting so hard.

I will now conclude.

Both: Phew-ee.

I hope you are well. Very best wishes from Your affect. Cousin Frank Cost.(Costelloe)

Resa's reply

(Written by Cathy Donnell with asides by John James and John Monaghan)

*Dear James,
Received Frank's letter last week. It would seem that you're both having a jolly time.*

Frank: If only..

James: I wish..

It will soon be Christmas and I'm so sad to hear that you'll probably not be home.

We are all well. Your Uncle John calls most days. He's aged a lot since you left. October was wet and cold. The spuds proved a good yield this year again, thank God, but with only myself here the work was hard and in the end I had to ask for Martha's help.

James: Her sister

Frank: Shortage of fit men these days

James, you know how I hated you joining the British Army but I'm starting to understand your reasoning.

James: At last

Redmond might succeed. Please God he will. Mrs Corey got bad news about Pat.

James: Poor Pat

The poor craither is walking the roads weeping and lamenting. There's talk she'll be taken to the mental.

James: God help Mrs Corey

James please mind yourself and look out for Frank, you know how reckless he can be. The fox took two chickens

Frank (to James) I told you fix that henhouse on your last leave but I've fixed the henhouse so that not even ould Nick himself could get in. I'm sending you socks and an Aran jumper.

James: good, we'll need the warmth for the winter.

Come back safe James. I'll be needing you.

James: I wonder why she said that?

Resa: I'm pregnant

Love from your wife Resa

James's letter to Resa

(written by John James and John Monaghan)

My dear Resa

Frank is writing this for me. I hope when you get this everything is well with you and the family. Is your Mam still there in the cottage?

Resa: She went home last week

I am pleased the potato crop turned out so good. Pity you didn't have more help from the village.

Resa: I couldn't ask Uncle Dan, he's so thin these days and you know the neighbours haven't spoken to me after the rebellion in Dublin

Things have settled a bit since Frank wrote to you. I am hopeful for leave soon. I'd love to have Christmas at home.

Frank wants this business over with now.

Your loving husband James